expressiveness, the of-
in charge and locker in the station house. When before the Police Court this ing he alleged he had a wife children in another city, and and leave two immediately if resued. Other officers testified that the man had been in the city several days exhibiting a railroad pass and soliciting alms. He was fined $5. Having no money, he will spend the next twenty days in jail.

John Collier was arrested by Officer Thompson in the same neighborhood last night. The man was drunk and was trespassing upon the property when taken into custody. When placed in the box this morning he stated that he was drunk by accident. He stated that he was a native of sundry cities, but this morning he alleged he was a Washingtonian. He was fined $5.

Early last night some excitement was caused in the Second ward by one negro chasing another. Officer Gill soon entered the contest and succeeded in capturing Henry Howard. close at whose heels Monroe Williams had been keeping. The latter charged Howard with robbing him of $15.
After reaching the station house Williams alleged that he came here yesterday afternoon from Georgetown with $26 in his pockets, and during his stay in this city he visited the "Petersburg" neighborhood, where he met Howard and another negro. His story, abridged somewhat, was to the effect that the accused "snatched" $15 out of his hand and with it a handkerchief when Howard and the negro who was with him ran. Williams followed close in their wake, crying "Stop thief!" The fugitives ran into Market alley and in close proximity to the station house, where officer Gill caught Howard. His companion, however, escaped.

The accused was brought before the Police Court this morning, when he denied the charge made by Williams, but failed to explain why he was running when arrested. Williams' handkerchief was found upon Howard's person, together with the torn portions of a dollar note which Williams alleged Howard tore when he pulled the money out of his hand. Howard was sentenced to serve ninety days in jail.

Sergeant Scott and Officer Thompson between eleven and twelve o'clock last night witnessed a record run of Louis Glassman in an automobile on upper King street. The sergeant timed the automobile and saw that it covered a square in nine seconds, when those operating machines are compelled by law to use eighteen seconds. The evidence of the officers was incontrovertible, and Glassman, in his defense, alleged he was conveying his brother-in-law who was sick to the depot that he might take a south bound train. When cross-questioned, he acknowledged his brother-in-law had been in his house since nine o'clock, showing he had had ample time to have transported him to the depot without being forced to rush his machine through the streets at a dangerous speed at midnight.
The officers alleged they called to him to stop, and that he paid no attention to them. The latter procured another automobile and intercepted the "flyer" at the union station.

The court told the accused that the law now in force was enacted by the Legislature of Virginia, and that the justice and the policemen were obligated to enforce it. There was but one way to dispose of the case and that was to impose the fine—ten dollars. Glassman paid the fine, and in his way out of the room glanced at Officer Thompson and said, "Never mind, I'll get you." He was seized and again made to face the court, when he was asked what he meant by his threat. Glassman said he meant if he saw the officer derelict in any way or violating any rule of the Police Board he would report him, but dis-claimed any intention or menacing the minion of the law in any way.
The court told the disgruntled man that, as a citizen, under the present ouster law, he could make charges, but that no threats would be tolerated; and further that if guilty of contempt or threats he might be compelled to give bond for his future good behavior. After denials of threats in the way the officer interpreted him, he was allowed to depart.

Officer Campbell also witnessed the violation of the speed law by Glass-man.
